DUPED BY HIS COUNTRYMEN

Antonio Panciera, a contractor, arrived in New York from Philadelphia last week.

At the Desbrosses Street Ferry he was accosted by a well dressed, black bearded Italian, who seized him by the hand and shaking it heartily said in his native tongue:

"Why, how do you do Mr. Montrossio? How are all my folks? I hope they are well?"

Antonio corrected his polite fellow-countryman, and in doing so innocently told him what his name and residence were.

The stranger apologized for his mistake, saying that he resembled his friend very much and then went away. Antonio proceeded on his way and had walked about one hundred yards when he was familiarly accosted by another Italian, who shook his hand warmly as he said:

"Give us your fist, old fellow. When did you arrive? I'm angry with you for not telegraphing me of your coming. I would have been as the depot to meet you."

"I don't know you," stammered Antonio.

"Yes you do, old boy," remarked the stranger, laughingly. "You are Antonio Panciera and you live in Philadelphia, where I came from. My name is Giuseppe Costa."

And Giuseppe, by his plausible manner and glib tongue, succeeded in gaining the confidence of Antonio.

"Where are you bound for—Italy?" asked Giuseppe.

"No—to Boston. I'm only staying in the city for a few days."

"Why, I'm going to Boston," said Giuseppe. "We'll go together."

While walking along they met three acquaintances of Giuseppe, who introduced them to Antonio. Giuseppe whispered to one of his friends, and then said to him:

"Where are you fellows going?"

"To Boston," one of them replied.

"We are going there also," said the unsuspecting Antonio.

"Let's go together, then, and we'll have lots of fun," suggested Giuseppe.

All agreed, and then followed a general conversation. Giuseppe's friends told Antonio what a wicked city New York was, full of rogues and thieves, and it was proposed that they should each deposit their money in a bag. Antonio placed $143 and a gold watch and chain in the bag, and then it was passed around for the others to throw in their wealth. Giuseppe engaged Antonio in conversation, during which his friends substituted another bag for that containing the money. The second bag was then handed to the contractor with the remark: "Be careful of this. There is over $500 in it."

Soon afterwards Giuseppe remarked that he would go home and prepare for the journey, and his friends said they would do likewise. Antonio was told to wait for them at the Desbrosses-street ferry. He asked laughingly if they weren't afraid that he might run away with the bag and their money. He was assured that they were not at all alarmed, and the four men left him. When he became tired of waiting for their return he entered a restaurant and ordered a meal. When he finished eating he stepped up to the cashier's desk and opened the bag. Without looking into it he put his hand in and brought out a piece of lead pipe. Then he looked into the bag and saw that it was half filled with small pieces of lead pipe.

The cashier saw that he had been victimized and allowed him to leave without paying for the meal. He told his story to Inspector Byrnes and Detective Sergeant Perazzo and Tessare were placed on the case. They arrested Giuseppe on Saturday and arraigned him before Justice Gorman at the Tombs. The victimized Italian picked him out of a dozen men. The prisoner told Justice Gorman that he wasn't the man, but he was held. Antonio was locked up in the House of Detention.

HOW THINGS GET LOST.—The inexcusable carelessness exhibited by some people in the handling of valuable property, and the ease with which things may be mislaid and lost, are illustrated by a lecture lately delivered by Dr. Wilson before the American Gynecological society. He gave thirty instances in which various articles, such as sponges, forceps, and other things, had been left in the abdominal cavity of patients who had undergone the operation of laparotomy. This operation, it may be stated, consists in cutting through the walls of the abdomen in the lumbar region, and in it many appliances are employed. It is in this direction that the carelessness referred to occurs. Here are thirty instances in which physicians have left their instruments in the abdominal cavities of patients, having sewed up the opening, and had gone away, and did not probably discover their loss until the patients were dead and buried. Some steps should be taken to end this ruinous waste. Possibly there might be appointed by the State an official whose duty it should be to attend all the operations ending in "otomy," and see that no valuable property is lost by being left in the incised regions.

Of course these implements so left are of no value to the patient, but a dead loss to the surgeon. The habit is one that should be discouraged, and when a surgeon has become confirmed in leaving his tools around in this careless way he should not be allowed to replace them by circulating a subscription paper.—Chicago Times.
